TALKING FISH OF NAZAKE MARSH

One year during a famine, when a fisherman went out in his boat to cast his nets in Nazake Marsh, he caught an extremely large fish. The fish let out a great scream, yelling for the fisherman not to eat it.

The man asked the fish for forgiveness, claiming it was all for his family, and then shot the fish dead. He brought it home and ate it with his family.

The next morning, everyone in his house had died. They say human fingers were found in the fish's belly.

Ever since then, taking a boat out on Nazake Marsh is said to be cursed. To this day, people do not sail there.

MYSTERIOUS DISMEMBERED BODY

The woman's body found in Dando City on the 27th was believed to be the work of some new psycho killer. However, it quickly became clear that the body had been taken from the morgue.

While at first authorities appear to be dodging questions, the truth is that no one is yet sure why an old woman's body would be taken, why part of the body was missing, or why there was a large wound on the neck.

Some say that the body was used in a ritual by a new cult. It seems the autumn ghost stories are not quite done for the year.

DANDO CITY

Aerial bombing?

[Dando City] Around 4:30 p.m. on the 1st, an explosion was observed in the center of Dando City. Several surrounding buildings were destroyed, citizens were pinned beneath debris, and large-scale fires broke out. Communications have been cut off, so details of the situation remain unclear. However, according to prefecture police, approximately 40,000 people were living in the affected area in the center of the city.

At the time of the incident, Dando Station was under renovation, which points to a possible detonation of an unexploded bomb.

Dando City was the target of air raids during the war, and even in recent years, unexploded bombs have been found in the courtyard of a local elementary school.

Isolation and quarantine.

The span of time from widespread outbreak to cleansing by fire, quarantine, and cover-ups is incredibly small. I imagine there was an official government manual to deal with this

Compared to high school and before, college takes place in a much larger environment. As for just how much larger it is, non-students will sometimes come in and attend classes. The instructors might not even mind this, and in certain circumstances, they might even praise the non-students for doing it.

Because so many different people are coming in, you meet a great variety of new people, and that can shatter the narrow worldviews that you held before. You realize that meeting amazing people will make you that much more amazing yourself.

Because college is so very open like that, not only do you find good rivals and mentors to improve your skills, but you also meet completely hopeless people who can open your eyes to the hidden arts of being hopeless. Watch out for them.

When I was in college, I met all sorts, from senpais who were hopeless, to senpais who were amazing, to senpais who were both hopeless and amazing. Then I went from being a kouhai to someone who could be called a hopeless senpai myself. Before I realized it, I was involved in this industry.

But being hopeless is so very fun.

Of course, being overly hopeless can destroy a person, and opportunities to commit criminal acts come by more frequently in college, so please try to be careful.

Yuki and the gang's college life and meetings have accelerated and are coming to a sort of end. Please look forward to that in the next volume.
